

It seems ridiculous to me that the government would even need to get involved in a situation like this. We the people pay our money, that we earned and pay taxes on, to receive XM Satallite radio in our cars because of the convenience it offers travelers.

To think that the government would get involved and restrict what a company could play on the radio station that they sell, assuming it's not deemed to be "rated R" in general content, is absolutely inexcusable.
